

Emily Medina, non-resident fellow Energy Policy Research Foundation (EPRINC)

Emily Medina is a non-resident fellow at EPRINC, with a focus on Mexico-US energy ties. Born and raised in Mexico, she has experience working with both the private and public sectors, and engaging with civil society. She spent last summer in DC working on a research project being undertaken by the Council of the Americas on natural gas investments across Latin America for the Inter-American Development Bank. Previously, she worked as a consultant for the National Water Commission in Mexico and Pronatura, an environmental non-profit organization. Ms. Medina holds an M.S. from New York University in Global Affairs with a concentration in Energy and Environment Policy and a B.A. from University of North Texas in International Studies.