

TRISTAN ABBEY

Tristan Abbey is President of Comarus Analytics LLC. Prior to its founding, he served for nearly a decade in senior policy roles at the Senate and the White House.

As a senior professional staff member of the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources from 2019 to 2020, Tristan developed and implemented Chairman Lisa Murkowski's Strategic Energy Initiative. He also supported her efforts to address global energy market volatility at the onset of the COVID-19 pandemic.

At the White House from 2017 to 2019, Tristan served as the National Security Council's Director for Energy and Environment (also with the National Economic Council) and then as Director for Strategic Planning. His responsibilities included developing national energy strategies and overseeing policy development for critical minerals, advanced nuclear technology, and related trade and finance concerns, among other issues.

From 2012 to 2017, Tristan was the Republican chief energy economist at the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources. He was the lead staff member of Senator Murkowski's successful campaign to repeal the oil export ban. He also worked on issues related to the Strategic Petroleum Reserve, liquefied natural gas (LNG) exports, and cross-border pipelines, among others.

Before coming to Washington, DC, Tristan worked for Clarium Capital Management and Founders Fund. His analysis has been published by The Atlantic, The American Interest, and Strategy & Tactics. Tristan holds an M.A. in International Security Studies from Georgetown University and a B.A. in History from Stanford University.
